The money market was more easy than for some time past. Plenty of capital was offered; but the rate of rest remained firm at seven per cent.

The gold market was quiet to-day under an advanced rate of premium. It opened in the morning at 1723, but in anticipation of a heavy shipment to-morrow for Europe it advanced two per cent, without how-ever, any considerable amount of sales. The price of coin, in our opinion, is yet higher than necessity calls , and its relative value to the government currency is Secretary of the Treasury has put in practice various destroy the influence of the gamblers and to reduce the premium; but every attempt to accomplish is object has thus far falled, and he has been driven hors du combet from the field. His curtail ment of the currency, his refusal to pay out the inte rest-bearing legal tenders, two hundred and fifty millions of which remain in his bands; his gold certificates his sale of foreign exchange, and finally his effort to break down the market by peddling fifty and a hundred then sand dollars in coin at a time, through government brokers, have all proved futile and failed of their purpose. He has one plan left to put in practice, and that is what is called the gold bill, which has gone through the House of Representatives and is now awaiting the action of the Senate. If that law passes it will no doubt have ; salutary effect, and tend to check gambling, but not entirely to eradicate the evil. It will put an end to all time sales, which at present constitute the operations of the speculators; but to what extent it will reduce the premium is a question which remains to be solved. There is yet another way by which the price of gold can and probably will be brought down. It is a plan which has been devised outside of the Tre sury building in Washington, and will be carried out without the assistance of Mr. Chase. It is the victory that Gene ral Grant is almost certain soon to achieve over the rebels in Virginia, which will insure the capture of Eichmond. When that event takes place-which we feel almost confident of -gold will probably find its proper level of forty to fifty per cent premium, despite the struggles of the

Receipts from customs 433,000

The subscriptions to the five-twenty two hundred mil-lion lean at the Sub-Treasury amounted to $35,250. We learn from Washington, semi-officially, that upwards of thirty-three millions of the bonds have been already taken, and that there is a prospect of their going off at a much more rapid rate than attended the negotiations of the five-twenty loan when it was first put on the market. The long fid: subscriptions now amount to about two
